Winter Harvest (Ornate Frame)

Fine Art Photograph, with mixed media and 23k gold leaf Archival Printing

50 x 75 cm

All the delicious textures, tastes and smells from the Winter garden. The smell of lavender and garlic entice me into the kitchen to stir up something warming. And the adorable little fairy wren, waiting patiently for the right mate.

Memento Mori, Gin Feast (Ornate Frame)

Fine Art Photograph, with mixed media and 23k gold leaf Archival Printing

85 x 120 cm

Lemons were included in so many Dutch still life paintings - in the 17th century they were a luxury, and the Dutch also like to flavour their spirits with peel. The pears represent abundance and the feminine form. Gold fish are symbols of good luck and fortune, although one wonders if this particular fish is so lucky. What I particularly love about creating a still life, is incorporating little quirks, like mum's yellow cat pepper shaker that is broken, but too loved to throw away. The sand timer and dead butterfly both signify the temporary nature of any abundance. Enjoy, but remember everything has a season.

Memento Mori, O'Malley's Feast (Ornate Frame)

Fine Art Photograph, with mixed media and 23k gold leaf Archival Printing

50 x 74 cm

Thomas O'Malley the alley cat - a sumptuous sea food banquet set before him. He is only interested in the little gold fish swimming around in chardonnay. What can we read into that? This image was a joy to create. All of the seafood was from a local dealer, as was the fruit and wine...the dishes are all odds and ends from mum's pantry, including my grandparents wedding platter and tablecloth. O'Malley the star pussy cat is my brother's pride and joy. In Dutch still life, a decadent seafood banquet was a symbol of high living. The dragonfly is a symbol of death (he's ready to devour the smaller insects) as of course is the skull. Cats and oysters can both be viewed as objects of lust and sexuality.

Memento Mori, Fruit Feast (Ornate Frame)

Fine Art Photograph, with mixed media and 23k gold leaf Archival Printing

65 x 90 cm

A couple of years ago I saw a Frida Kahlo still life with a bird on a watermelon. I loved the use of colour and was inspired to incorporate some beautiful Australian bird life for this fruit still life. Including little creepy crawlies is always one of my favourite parts of the process. I've chosen luxurious, erotic fruits for the piece. The insects are ready to devour the decadent fruit, and the birds devour the insects. The cycle of life is ever present and urges us be present and live our lives as fully as we can.

Lush and beautiful Paintings of flowers and fruit, combine drama, colour and technique to create balance, truth and serenity.

Oil paint has vibrancy, delicateness and strength – it is the perfect medium to suggest the elusive quality of light and express nuance. Chiaroscuro, light and dark drama within the painting are a nod to the Dutch tradition.
